X Reflection:

Having started in the position as Interim Dean for the School of Education in January, I found myself quickly diving into the many facets associated with our state of emergency (COVID-19). I feel that faculty within the Education Department managed the expedient transition to an online platform with an ease and commitment that surpassed my expectations. Our biggest concern during this unprecedented time revolved around meeting the state requirements for prepracticum hours, field experiences and the many demands associated with the practicum. In order to facilitate the necessary adjustments, Jason Miles and I attended and continue to attend weekly meeting with DESE’s Education Prep team.

Recordings assuring our candidates and partner schools accompanied by emails were sent to students, principals, faculty , supervising practitioners, and program supervisors to ease their concerns and to assure them that we were available to provide support. We had two meetings with our Division of Education Advisory Board to gain insights to how K-12 schools and other organizations were handling the situation as we navigated through these unknown territories.

As I continue to reflect on the various ways in which we have reached out to students, partners, etc. I have discovered that the key to maintaining a calm in the storm atmosphere is to listen and maintain solid and frequent lines of communication.

Report on how the department adapted to the mid-semester disruption caused by the pandemic. Reflect on actions that surprised you and on lessons learned that will help in the future.
